What's Happening Now

Over the last year, public safety concerns have been raised about an important and valued component of the downtown Asheville experience: street performances. Concerns include overcrowded sidewalks, pedestrian crowding in roadways, motorist safety, blocked crosswalks and handicap access.

The timeline to the left outlines public input and staff presentations to City Council's Public Safety Committee regarding street performances. Staff has sought committee guidance while developing options to address safety concerns. Respecting the importance of public input and information sharing, no recommendation for action has been presented to the committee to-date.

After the August 24 meeting and a request for guidance related to a possible pilot program, staff is moving forward with a small group meeting of stakeholders representing the busking community, business community and Asheville residents. This group will 1) react and discuss the idea of the pilot study presented at the August 24 meeting and 2) offer additional solutions for maintaining public safety and sense of place in downtown Asheville.

The next step in the public input process will be determined after the group meeting.

Why It's Happening

Downtown Asheville is a bustling and vibrant place. The unique mix of uses contributes to a unique atmosphere appreciated by residents and out-of-town visitors alike.

Placemaking is one of the tools local governments use to engage the community in sustaining an area's character. Its key attributes include (a) sociability; (b) uses and activities; (c) access and linkages; and (d) comfort and image. A successful 'place' is a reflection of a community's effort to create an appropriate balance of these important components. The challenge and importance of taking steps to balance the various components becomes all the more important as the number of people and uses in downtown Asheville grows.¹
